City's Brazilian Beat kicks off with museum party

Boca Raton's fifth annual Brazilian Beat celebration moved from a downtown park to the Mizner Park Amphitheater this year.

So the reception moved, too, to the lobby of the Boca Raton Museum of Art that rubs elbows with the amphitheater. Some 80 party goers watched as the amphitheater filled up the evening of Sept. 10.

And it did. By the 6 p.m. start time there were already 1,000 people streaming in for the free celebration with music on stage and food trucks on the grassy lot next door. At least another 9,000 were expected.

"We love whenever we can partner with the city and celebrate," said museum director Irvin Lippman.

"We're so happy this event has taken off," said City Councilman Scott Singer, introducing Mayor Susan Haynie to make the sanctioned celebration of Brazil Independence Day official. The event reflects growing Brazilian businesses here and the diversity of the community, she said.

Haynie introduced the deputy consul of Brazil in Miami, Lucas Chalella das Neves, who said he stepped in for the new ambassador who had just started work at the consulate. It was das Neves' first visit to Boca, he said.

Dini Heizer, immediate past president of the Rotary Club of Boca Raton West, arrived to welcome him and spoke to him in Portuguese, the language of Brazil and that Rotary Club. She invited him to speak at their meeting.

Getting in the mood for samba dancers and Brazilian music later, Councilman Jeremy Rodgers wore a Brazilian soccer shirt and brought the family. Amphitheater manager Amy DiNorscio showed blinking cocktail tumblers with LED lights and the Brazilian Beat insignia.

Jody Harrison Grass, the museum's board chairwoman, wore Rio Olympic-style ring earrings for the occasion. "Anytime we can highlight the museum..." she said about hosting the event.

Museum board vice chairwoman Peg Anderson agreed.

"We do this whenever we have something in the amphitheater. We're good neighbors."
