Overcomes," and social worker Lejeune Goddard, speaking on "Who is My Neighbor?" according to Marjorie O'Sullivan, treasurer of Developing Interracial Social Change.

The annual Humanitarian Award, usually given to an individual, will be presented to Pearl City Community Dialogue, a community group that has worked on neighborhood issues, including speed bumps, for four years, O'Sullivan said.

A color guard from the NJROTC and the Boca Raton High School Marching Band will also take part in the ceremony, said Self, the city's community events coordinator. The march to Sanborn Square will follow and should take about 20 minutes, with city police stopping traffic as walkers pass, she said.

The city will provide a trolley for the walk, and a trolley will run continually between free parking at City Hall, which is closed for the federal holiday, and Sanborn Square. The public is invited to attend the ceremony, walk and celebration, she said.

King's birthday is Jan. 15, 1929. The Martin Luther King bust was dedicated in 2000, according to the city web site. Pearl City is collaborating with the city on the celebration, O'Sullivan said.

"I think it's a brilliant idea to bring the celebration to the wider community that wouldn't have come to Hughes Park, but will come to Sanborn Square," she said. "The city will put up banners and there's really good entertainment."

The entertainment schedule in Sanborn Square will include: Sovereign, St. Joan of Arc Youth Choir, South Florida's Heat Wave, Silent Worshippers Dance Ministry, Jai Rose Band and Bibleway Temple Ministries.

Developing Interracial Social Change is celebrating 20 years, and the Pearl City Historical Walk is 10 a.m. Jan. 24 starting at Macedonia AME Church with a short lecture. The walking tour takes about two hours and it's free, O'Sullivan said.
