UM president announces $100M gift in first speech

BY DOUGLAS HANKS

The Miami Herald

The University of Miami on Friday announced a $100 million gift for science and engineering programs from Phillip and Patricia Frost, the billionaire couple who are also the top donors of the science museum seeking a county rescue for its construction project.

The donation, one of the largest in UM's history, was revealed in the inaugural address of the private school's new president, Dr. Julio Frenk, a former Harvard health dean. Frenk pledged a new level of academic ambition for South Florida's leading university, and touted the Frost gift as a major boost for the effort.

"They have made our journey possible," Frenk said of the Frosts, "and they will lead the way to our future."

Frenk, named UM's sixth president in August, took the spotlight in his first major address as an academic heavyweight but one without the star power of his predecessor. UM hired Donna Shalala in 2001 after she spent eight years as President Bill Clinton's Health secretary. She's now running the Clinton family's high-profile foundation.

In Frenk, UM also has an expert in public health policy: he served as Mexico's minister of health between 2000 and 2006. Frenk is also the first physician to assume the top job at UM, where the bulk of its $3 billion budget comes from medical revenue from its hospital and doctors provided to Miami-Dade's Jackson hospital system.

Frenk touted the diversity he brings to a job that paid more than $1 million when Shalala held it, according to tax records.

"I am proud to be this university's first Hispanic president," Frenk, born in Mexico City, said in accented English. "I am keenly aware that each of us holds diverse identities. Each of us is all of us. I commit to serve this university as everyone's president."

He is also the university's first Jewish president. Frenk said his father's family was forced to leave Germany in the 1930s. They settled in Mexico, and Frenk said he would not be there without his home country's "welcoming refuge." The first native Spanish speaker to lead UM, Frenk called Mexico "rich in the ways that matter most: tolerance, kindness to strangers, solidarity with those who suffer persecution."

If his speech seemed to rap Donald Trump and other GOP contenders advocating a crackdown on immigration, it also took on an effort favored by President Barack Obama: scoring pricey colleges by how much their graduates actually earn.

"Excellence can be undermined by the impulse to measure the value of education through the narrow lens of what might be called 'instant post-graduation gratification' — gauging the value of a degree by a graduate's starting salary," he said. "At the same time, we must not ignore the legitimate and growing concerns about student debt."

Frenk began his tenure at a time of extended recovery for UM.
